EXECUTION AND PROCESS

OPERATIONAL MEETINGS

An operational meeting is not a report, it is an unblocking.

What it solves, who joins and how to run it in fifteen minutes.

> AND THE CONSEQUENCE
>
> If nobody leaves with one obstacle fewer, it only repeated what the dashboard already said.

THE CASCADE

How the daily turns into a one hour meeting.

WHAT YOU SEE

Everyone recounts everything they did yesterday, because it feels like that is what is expected...

THE MECHANISM

...one problem sparks a debate, and two people argue while eight watch...

THE CONSEQUENCE

...and the clock runs over, people start avoiding the meeting and the blocker is still there.

> A long daily does not show commitment. It shows nobody knows what it is there to solve.

THE FORK

Is this topic for the daily?

THE RULER

01

Does it stop someone from working today? It belongs in the daily.

02

Can it be solved in two minutes with the people in the circle? It belongs in the daily.

03

Does it need analysis, a change of plan or new people? Not the daily, it goes to the tactical.

> The daily solves today. Anything that needs tomorrow has another room.

THE METHOD

The Pit Stop, four moves in fifteen minutes.

01 NUMBERS

the three numbers of the day on screen, only the deviation gets discussed

02 BLOCKER

each person says what is stuck, in one sentence, without the backstory

03 OWNER

each blocker leaves with who unblocks it and by what time

04 BACK ON TRACK

anything over two minutes leaves the circle, and everyone goes back to work

> A good pit stop is not the most thorough one. It is the one that gets the car back on track fastest.

WHAT TO ASK, IN ORDER

Four questions, always in this order.

01 · NUMBERS

How are today's numbers against the target?

three minutes, dashboard on screen, nobody reads numbers out loud

02 · BLOCKER

What has been stuck since yesterday?

one sentence per person, the problem, not the story

03 · OWNER

Who unblocks it and by when?

a name and a time, never we will see

04 · BACK ON TRACK

What leaves this room for a one on one conversation?

anything over two minutes, right after the circle

TWO MODELS

The reporting daily or the unblocking daily.

THE COMMON MODEL

The reporting daily

- Everyone recounts what they did yesterday
- Seated, with no set end time
- A problem becomes a debate in front of everyone
- It ends with no owner for anything

THE DESIGNED MODEL

The unblocking daily

- Everyone says what is stuck
- Standing, fifteen minutes, always at the same time
- A problem gets an owner and moves to a one on one
- It ends with every blocker tied to a name and a time

MISTAKE AND CONSEQUENCE

What a badly run daily costs.

01 The team's morning.

→ fifteen minutes that turn into an hour, every day, multiplied by everyone in the circle.

02 The blocker.

→ whoever was stuck leaves the same way, just later.

03 The ritual itself.

→ people start skipping it, and problems only surface once they are already fires.

> A bad daily does not disappear on its own. It becomes the excuse to have no meeting at all.

THE CHAIN

The stopwatch test.

01 Start a stopwatch at your next daily and write down when it ends.

02 Now count how many blockers left with an owner and a time.

↓

03 If it ran past fifteen minutes or no blocker got an owner, you held a reporting meeting.

WHERE LEADERSHIP STEPS IN

Repeat it for a week. Time drops once the question changes from what did you do to what is stuck.

RUN IT THIS WAY NEXT TIME

Three moves for tomorrow's daily.

STEP 01

Change the opening question.

from what did you do yesterday to what is blocking you today

STEP 02

Put the three numbers of the day on screen before you start.

whoever arrives already sees the deviation, nobody needs to narrate

STEP 03

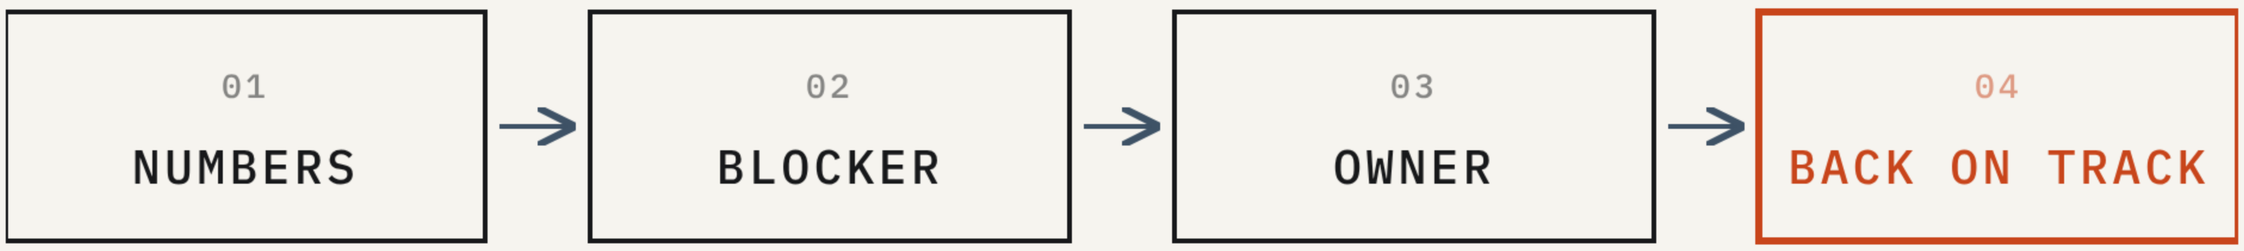

Create the two minute rule.

past that, the topic leaves the circle with an owner and becomes a one on one

> Same time, same place, standing. A daily lives on rhythm, not on a new agenda.

THE MODEL THAT STICKS

The Pit Stop, in the order that matters.

A good daily is not the one that reports everything. It is the one that unblocks someone before lunch.

SAVE THIS FOR LATER

before tomorrow's daily.
