

CLARITY

The people in the room understood.

How to communicate a decision so nobody gets it wrong.

AND THE CONSEQUENCE

The problem is the version arriving at the front line three days later.

THE CASCADE

How a decision deforms on the way.

WHAT YOU SEE

You explain it well, and the room understands...

THE MECHANISM

...each person passes on what they found most important...

THE CONSEQUENCE

...and the front line gets a version nobody decided.

| The first thing lost on the way is always the context.

THE FORK

Before communicating, check it in yourself.

CHECK YOURSELF

01

Can you say in one sentence what changes? If not, you did not decide.

02

Can you say starting when? If not, it is an intention.

03

Can you say who does what? If not, it is an announcement.

A decision tangled in your head comes out as confusion in everyone else's.

THE METHOD

The four lines of a decision.

01 WHAT CHANGES

in one sentence, no justification and no hedging

02 STARTING WHEN

a date, not soon, not in the coming weeks

03 WHO DOES WHAT

a name and an action, for each affected part

04 WHAT DOES NOT CHANGE

the line nobody writes, and the one that prevents most panic

Without the fourth line, the team assumes everything is up for grabs.

WHAT TO ASK, IN ORDER

Four questions at the end of the talk.

01 • WHAT CHANGES

How would you explain this to your team?

the answer shows what actually survived

02 • STARTING
WHEN

What is your next step with this?

understanding is proven in action, not in agreement

03 • WHO DOES
WHAT

What was confusing?

better than was that clear, which always gets an automatic yes

04 • WHAT DOES NOT CHANGE

What does this break on your side?

brings out the side effect you had not seen

TWO MODELS

Announcing or communicating.

THE COMMON MODEL

Announcing

- Sends the finished decision
- Says it once and assumes it stuck
- Explains the what and forgets the why
- Discovers the noise weeks later

THE DESIGNED MODEL

Communicating

- Sends what changes and what does not
- Repeats it across different channels
- Explains the why and the criteria
- Confirms understanding on the spot

MISTAKE AND CONSEQUENCE

Three habits that guarantee noise.

01 Communicating a hard decision in writing only.

- text with no face gets filled with whatever tone the reader feels.

02 Softening it so much that nothing seems to have changed.

- the person leaves thinking it is optional, and carries on as before.

03 Letting each manager translate it their own way.

- four areas, four versions, and all four believe theirs is right.

| If you do not write the official version, someone writes it for you.

THE CHAIN

The broken telephone test.

01

Ask someone who was not in the room.

02

What did you understand had changed, and since when?

03

Came back different? The problem is your communication, not their attention.

WHERE LEADERSHIP STEPS IN

Every important decision deserves that test with two people, two days later.

RUN IT THIS WAY NEXT TIME

Fifteen minutes before you communicate.

STEP 01

Write the four lines before you open your mouth.

if you cannot write them, it is not decided yet

STEP 02

Communicate by speaking first, then send it in writing.

speaking answers doubts, the text becomes the official version

STEP 03

Run the broken telephone test two days later.

with someone who was not in the room, which is where it deforms

Repeating the same decision three times is not redundancy, it is the job.

THE MODEL THAT STICKS

The Four Lines, in the order that matters.

Clarity is not speaking beautifully. It is arriving intact on the other side.

SAVE THIS FOR LATER

on the next decision you have to communicate.
