

SELF AWARENESS

A blind spot does not live in what you cannot do, it lives in what you do without thinking.

How a leader finds their own blind spots.

AND THE CONSEQUENCE

By definition, alone you cannot see it.

THE CASCADE

Reflection uses the lens that is crooked.

WHAT YOU SEE

You set aside time to think about yourself.

THE MECHANISM

You reach the same conclusions, because you use the same criteria as always.

THE CONSEQUENCE

You leave the reflection convinced, and the blind spot sits exactly where it was.

Thinking about yourself with your own ruler confirms what you already believed.

THE FORK

When was the last piece of feedback that stung?

THE LAST STING

01

More than a year ago?

you stopped asking, or they stopped answering

02

It stung and you explained the context?

you listened to reply, not to change

03

It stung and something changed in your week?

then the mirror worked

A blind leader is not whoever does not know. It is whoever knows and changed nothing.

THE METHOD

The Four Mirrors.

01 YOUR REPORTS

sees your effect up close, and speaks the least about it

02 YOUR PEER

sees the cost you create in other teams

has nothing left to lose, which makes them the most precise

04 THE RECORDING

you watching yourself, without the generous memory

No single mirror is enough. A blind spot appears in the gap between them.

WHAT TO ASK, IN ORDER

Four questions, one per mirror.

01 • YOUR REPORTS

What do I do that gets in the way of your work?

for your reports, and wait out the silence before the answer

02 • YOUR PEER

What cost does my area create in yours?

for your peer, and do not defend yourself while they speak

03 • WHO LEFT

What did you never tell me while you were here?

for whoever left, a coffee settles it

04 • THE RECORDING

How do I sound when I am impatient?

record one of your meetings and watch it without skipping

TWO MODELS

Two ways to receive a mirror.

THE COMMON MODEL

Listening to reply

Explains the context before the sentence ends

Hunts for the example that does not apply

Says thanks and changes nothing

Next time, nobody speaks

THE DESIGNED MODEL

Listening to change

Stays silent until the person finishes

Asks for one more example

Changes one thing the following week

Next time, they say more

MISTAKE AND CONSEQUENCE

Three habits that protect the blind spot.

01 Only asking people who like you.

→ you receive comfort and call it feedback.

02 Explaining the context before hearing the end.

→ the person learns that disagreeing is hard work, and stops.

03 Confusing routine with competence.

→ the blind spot lives exactly where you are most on autopilot.

The more comfortable the answer, the less likely it is anything new.

THE CHAIN

The ready answer test.

01

Notice the topic where you have the answer before the question ends.

02

It is always the same subject, and you never move on it.

03

That is where the blind spot is, and it will announce itself no other way.

WHERE LEADERSHIP STEPS IN

Fast certainty on a complex topic is a sign of an old lens, not of experience.

RUN IT THIS WAY NEXT TIME

Three moves this month.

▣ STEP 01 Ask one of your reports what gets in the way. and hold five seconds of silence without filling it	▣ STEP 02 Invite someone who left for a coffee. it is the most honest and cheapest feedback there is	■ STEP 03 Record one of your meetings and watch it whole. without skipping the parts where you are talking
--	---	---

Do one a month. All four at once becomes a project, and projects die.

THE MODEL THAT STICKS

The Four Mirrors, a loop and not a list.

A blind leader is not whoever does not know. It is whoever knows and does not change.

SAVE THIS FOR LATER

next time someone hesitates before answering you.
